J. T. GOSSETT.

In moving that George Gould appointed trustee of his sister's estate, M. Bonnet, counsel for the Gould family, said:

"The countess herself admits that she has indulged in extravagant expenditures and is in need of an authoritative adviser to supply the experience which she lacks. She consents to the appointment of a judicial trustee. At the same time I think it necessary to submit the full of 300,000 francs in her own right. She was married May 4, 1895, under the separate estate law. Since then she spent 15,000,000 francs (the amount of her income) and is confronted by debts amounting to 22,000,000 ($4,400,000). The family council took the following decision: "Whereas, it is known to each of the members of the council that Anna Gould, the wife of Boni de Castellane, has an income of 300,000 francs; that in five years she has spent from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 francs in exchildren that a stop should be put to this fantastic expenditure, the couneil authorizes George Gould, her brother, to take proceedings for the appointment of a judicial trustee." ness: Expended on real estate, 3,-702,000 francs, in connection with the charity bazaar and the living quarters of the Castellanes in the Rue de Malakofi; mortgages due, 1900 1909, 6,585,260 francs; loans, notes of 155 francs: to sixty-five dealers in

Charles Wertheimer, has a bill for way. 2,000,000 francs. He bought and sold Gould's lawyer explained, the family estates of the Castellanes had been seized for debt and the Gould family had been compelled to intervene in order to save the property and in the belief that matters could be smoothed over without publicity.

George Gould in asking for his appointment declared that the countess concurred in his request. There was, M. Bonnet said, nothing to prevent such an arrangement, as, under the French law, a foreigner may be appointed judicial trustee for an extravagant French woman.

"There is every advantage," said M. Bonnet, "in the selection of Geo. Gould for this trusteeship. He is wealthier than the Countess Castellane and will be able to exert a great moral influence because he is in 'a ence and to assist the defendant,"

The judgment of the court concludes with the usual legal phraseol-

"The court ordains that it is for bidden to the defendant to plead compromise, borrow or receive personal property, or to alienate it, or to burden her possessions with mort-FRANK ALVEY gages without the assistance of the said trustee."

> Countess Castellane was questioned by the president of the court on Friday last. The decision of the court will lead to a great change from her present style of living, as it is the purpose of Mr. Gould to so limit the expenditures of the Castellanes that the outstanding indebtedness may be wiped out. This indebtedness, it is understood, was liquidated by George Gould personally during the summer, and the proceedings that action

It seemed a long distance to the sick man as he was being conveyed from the camp, but in his condition quality. he paid little attention to what was happening. When the cart finally stopped, several Spaniards stepped up and took Johnson from the vehicle into the building. He thought it was rather strange but did not realize the full truth until he was taken inside. He found the hospital full of wounded Spanish soldiers-many of them shot in the engaegments in which he himself had participated. Then he knew he was in the enemy's camp. take him to the American hospital for officers had either misunderstood nis instructions, or, which is the more likely had maliciously taken him over

Spanish soldiers who had suffered only leg or arm wounds gathered around his cot and eyed him curlously, hour after hour, though they offered no violence. On the contrary they seemed inclined the other way, and urged him to take various articles of food. Fearing he would be poisoned, he refused food and medicine alike. The Spanish doctor visited him frequently, but Johnson would not swallow the potions prescribed. On the second day he drank some goat's milk, imagining that it would be harder to poison milk with out the taste detecting it than any other food. On the third day he drank goat's milk in large quantities but still took no medicine.

On the morning of the fourth day, what was his surprise to see an American officer enter the hospital, accompanied by the British and French ministers. The officer, who proved to be Assistant Surgeon General Senn had been anxious to see how the Spanish treated their prisoners and had secured permission to visit the hospital through the French and British representatives.

The surgeon's eyes chanced light on Johnson the instant he opened the door, and going to his cot, he inquired how an American happened to be in that place.

"I don't know," replied the sick man. "Major Anthony gave me this permit," at the same time drawing sleeplessness, nervous exhaustion, or it from under his pillow, "and the native driver brought me here." Senn understood the situation and, after making a medical examination of the patient, announced that he would secure his release.
